

Yamataikoku

邪馬台国

This elegant and beautiful combination of color and form will catch your eye.

This flower is not a traditional Japanese variety, but a relatively new 'shinka' variety bred in 1978, as it is a cross between an Edo variety and an American variety. The whole flower is also very large, dark purple and gorgeous looking.

As mentioned above, I was taken aback by the photograph of this iris. This flower is graceful, elegant, luxurious, etc. in the way it blooms, but above all, the dark and distinct colors are the reason why we fall in love with it.

Sayaka Suwa

Graduate School of Agriculture
Tamagawa University

