

feminine skirt (Usugesho)

My favorite iris is usugesho.

Slight streaks of purple in the light pink outer petals.

And the drooping flower has a softly folded edge to the outer petiole.

For these reasons, when I first saw this flower, it looked like a feminine skirt.

Considering the origin of the name, we can associate it with a woman from the word "light makeup."

The person who gave the flower its name must have also felt a sense of femininity in this flower.
